Presentation Title

The supervision of multi-professional working groups in the clinical field; an analysis of an experience of ongoing supervision of a team of public service workers for a period of 6 years.

Abstract
The supervision of multi-professional working groups has some particularly complex characteristics relating to various aspects. The multi-professional teams that deal with managing complex therapeutic and rehabilitation projects in the field of mental health and addictions are made up of professionals who work together with different levels of training experience, of professional perspectives, and also have different theoretical and methodological approaches Group supervision focuses on specific needs: case management of complex situations; care of the emotional involvement of team members; professional development and identifying a shared method, The Author directs a public mental health service for adults. He has regularly conducted ongoing supervision with two drug addiction services, with multi-professional teams. The use of supervision models most used in TA (Newton- Napper, Clarkson,Mazzetti) will be shared with the participants while illustrating how to ensure a "group maintenance effect", something most needed in supervision.
